THE RIGHTS OF COLORED VOTERS. In Ohio and California the fifteenth amendment has been set at naught by the refusal to register negro voters, it being alleged that the existing State laws, which disfranchise the colored men, are in full force notwithstanding the amendment, and that the negroes are not entitled to the privileges of citizenship until Congress takes action in the matter by passing laws to enforce the Constitution. It is well that this question has been raised now, so that it can be settled at once and forever by Congress before it adjourns; and if there yet remains anything to be done to secure to our colored fellow-citizens all their rights, the Democrats will be doing an essential service to the community by making all the legal objections they can think of at once, so that they can be attended to. The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has now under consideration a bill for the enforcement of the fifteenth amendment, which is as stringent in its provisions as the emergency requires; and we sincerely hope that it will be reported as soon as practicable, and acted upon by both houses of Congress without delay. The bill declares that any official who shall officiously deny the right of any citizen to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition at any election, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by imprisonment not less than one nor more than three years, or by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5000, or by both fine and imprisonment. The bill contains other provisions of similar character for the purpose of preventing any interference with the exercise of the franchise by the negroes, and it will effectually put a stop to the performances of Democratic Attorneys-Generals and others who are now attempting to carry favor with the lowest, most ignorant, and brutal classes in the community by obstructing, so far as is in their power, the operations of the fifteenth amendment.

EUROPEAN COMPLIMENTS TO AMERICA.

It is such a rare occurrence for the Government of the United States to be gracefully and efficiently represented at a European Court that the exceptional cases deserve special notice. The old definition of an ambassador was a man sent to a foreign country to lie for the benefit of the nation he represented, but generally the American people do not have even this service performed, and their foreign ministers are about equally divided between those who go abroad to make themselves rich by parsimoniously hoarding their salaries, and those who make themselves ridiculous by nonsensical display. By a fortunate combination of accidents, however, it occasionally happens that the right man is put into the right place abroad as well as at home. This seems to be the case now with the Austrian mission, if a fair criterion can be furnished by the proceedings of the dinner given by Mr. John Jay at the American legation in Vienna, on the 22d day of February, as a celebration of Washington's birthday, to the Chancellor of the Austrian Empire, Count de Beust, and the Ministers of the various European nations who are accredited to the Austrian Court. The whole affair was managed with an amount of tact unusual on such occasions, and in response to graceful speeches and toasts offered by Mr. Jay, Washington, America, and the American people received a host of graceful compliments from Count de Beust and the official representatives of France, England, Prussia, Russia, and Spain. All the speeches, except the two latter, were delivered in English, and this circumstance, while it heightened the interest of the occasion, gave rise to several humorous allusions. For instance, the Count de Beust said that he should be totally unable to follow the diplomatic system of using language to conceal his thoughts, because the utmost that he could dare to aspire to was to express his feelings. He is evidently, however, no novice in the use of the English tongue, as may be seen by his utterance of the following sentiment:—"I trust that the motto of the great Republic across the ocean, unity and freedom, will always be and remain ours—unity and freedom! The first is the only element of strength, the last is the great principle of progress."

The French Minister paid a very graceful personal compliment to Mr. Jay as the descendant of the John Jay of Revolutionary memory, and he contended that the firm friendship between France and the United States was even better than a formal alliance. Mr. Lytton, the Secretary of the British Legation, in commenting upon the late war, gave this emphatic and vigorous summary of its management and results:—"When we recall to mind merely the magnitude of those colossal armies—all composed of men who, but a few months before, had been unarmed, peace-loving citizens; and who, the moment after they had rescued from the sudden eclipse of a most unprovoked calamity those thirty-four bright stars of the great Atlantic constellation, again became, as they had been before, unarmed, peace-loving citizens; yet whose victorious operations had in the meanwhile covered a line of territory actually vast in extent than the whole distance from Moscow to Madrid—I say, when we remember how these armies were created, who those armies achieved (not for America only, but for the cause of universal humanity), and then again how these armies were dissolved, we must surely acknowledge that, in the history of all the world, there is no other such example of how much may be effected, even materially, by sheer force of conscience, when, indeed, the conscience of a great nation is fairly concentrated upon the duties of a great cause."

Equally complimentary and scarcely less striking speeches were made by the representatives of Russia, Prussia, and Spain. The latter lavished high praise upon Washington, and upon this nation as "the model of free countries, which has known how to harmonize the most extended liberty with the profoundest regard for law." He also eulogized Grant as a "brave warrior and loyal magistrate who knows how to maintain as well the treaties of reciprocal friendship which are based upon right and justice."

There is a rumor in the air that the only sensible style of dress that the dictates of fashion have permitted the sex feminine to assume of late years is to be abandoned forthwith. The short skirts that have been in vogue for the last few seasons are to disappear from our promenades, and the pavements are to be swept by the trailing gowns of the maids and matrons of America. It is very sad to think that the women cannot maintain a really sensible and elegant style of dress for more than a couple of seasons, and preserve a reasonable mean between the utterly hideous "rational" costume of the Florence Heights doctresses and such abominations as the long skirts that every one hoped were banished forever from the streets. There is a good deal of talk about woman's rights nowadays, but one of the primary rights might be to dress with elegance, taste, and a proper regard for the conveniences of life. The street dresses at present worn by our women, although perhaps open to artistic criticism in some of their features, are certainly to be commended for their embodiment of common sense principles that ought to secure their continuance. It is difficult to imagine how any woman who has experienced the convenience and comfort of short dresses should ever be willing to adopt a fashion that has nothing whatever to recommend it. There is no accounting for tastes, however, or for the freaks of fashion.
